Course aim

This course is all about the prehistoric landscape of Britain, taking learners on a journey in time from the earlier hunter-gathers through to the Iron Age. The course explores topics such as Bronze Age burials and the 'beaker' culture, monuments like Stonehenge and Avebury, stone circles, causewayed enclosures, burial mounds, hill forts, settlements and the development of agriculture, fields and farming. The course shows how, over time, the landscape developed as the countryside became more settled and communities arose leading to the emergence of the Iron Age tribal units.

Course outcomes

1. Attain knowledge on how the landscape developed over time
2. Identify the evidence of this development can be seen in the landscape still today.
3. Determine the age and functionality of some of the ancient monuments in the modern landscape.
4. Assess the importance of ritual in prehistoric societies.
